- "Lovecraft Country" by Matt Ruff and published in FRANCE by Presses de la Cité Editions. Matthew Theron "Matt" Ruff is an American author of thriller, science-fiction and comic novels. Ruff was born in New York City in 1965. His Family are Lutheran, and he has German Ancestry. His Father was a Hospital Chaplain, and his Mother was a Missionary's Daughter. At the Age of 5, he decided he wanted to be a Fiction Writer. He spent his Childhood and Adolescence learning how to tell Stories. As a Child, many Adults around him did not take his Desire to become a Writer Seriously, and attempted to persuade him to choose a Different Career. However, Ruff's Mother was very Supportive of him and his Hope to become a Writer. Ruff spent a lot of his time focusing on Novel-Length Fiction. Although, he did write some Shorter Stories. In Elementary School, he wrote a number of Short Stories, many of them starring his Classmates in Scenarios cribbed from Movies or TV. Ruff has said that reading these aloud in English Class was his first Experience performing in front of an Audience and his first Solid Evidence that he had what it took to entertain People with his Storytelling....

Matt Ruff's New Book is therefore a Kind of Exorcism. It pits a Predominantly Black Cast of Characters against "America's Demons" [?], though the Shoggoth in the Woods is not nearly as Dangerous as the Systemic and Ubiquitous Racism they encounter. In the Overture, set in 1954, we meet Atticus, a Veteran of the Korean War, who learns that his Estranged Father has disappeared in Massachusetts, trying to find out a Family Secret. Along with his Uncle, the Publisher of The Safe Negro Travel Guide, and his predictably Feisty friend Letitia, he sets off on a Rescue Mission that involves Secret Societies, Portals through Reality and Everyday Bigotry.... The First Story takes up a Quarter of the Book, then Subsequent Chapters focus on Individual Characters and feature a Haunted House, a Pocket Universe, a Malign Mannequin and a Cursed Book....
